A Wet Drouth

The revenue returns for the past fiscal year of 1913 ought to discourage the dries to some extent unless they be able to explain away the apparent results, which they will, of course. However the revenue returns show that 18,000 saloons have gone out of business, yet, the drinkers of whiskey and brandy have consumed 7,500,000 gallons more than any previous year in the country's history, exceeding the banner year record of 1907 by 7,300,000 gallons. More than 1,000,000 more barrels of beer were tipped this year than in 1911. Smokers of cigars, cigarettes and chewers of tobacco also held up the big returns, greater than ever and the treasury was enriched $21,000,000 more than in 1911, the previous high-water mark. This is the face of the decreased saloons to the number of 18,000.

Only Ten Birds

An opinion of interest to bird hunters and bird lovers has been received from Ernest A. Green, assistant attorney general, by Edwin Turner, deputy fish and game commissioner of Missouri. The opinion states that no hunter, under the law, can have in his possession at one time more than ten birds. A recent enactment says the hunter can kill no more than ten birds in a day and can have no more than fifteen birds in his possession at one time. The assistant attorney general says the "fifteen" undoubtedly was inserted erroneously. Wild turkeys are the only exception. No more than four of them are allowed in a hunter's possession at a time. Fines are fixed for violations.
